

The Bloomfield Record.

VOL. VII.

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1879.

NO. 356.

New Jersey Temperance Alliance.

The New Jersey Temperance Alliance met in the Central Presbyterian Church of Newark on Tuesday morning, with Rev. R. A. McKim, D. D., of Madison, as President in the chair, and Rev. G. K. Morris, Secretary. The Convention was opened with devotional exercises, after which the President made a few remarks. He said that the temperance question is not a new one, but one which has been before the people for many years. He said that the temperance cause is a noble one, and one which should be supported by all who are true to the principles of morality. He said that the temperance cause is a cause which should be supported by all who are true to the principles of morality. He said that the temperance cause is a cause which should be supported by all who are true to the principles of morality.

Letters.

Remainder of the letter to the Editor of the Bloomfield Record, dated November 12, 1879, is as follows:—
The Bloomfield National Greenback Labor Club held a meeting on Wednesday evening to re-organize for the campaign of 1880. Mr. F. C. Bliss, who had been President of the Club since its formation in 1876, was present, and made a speech in which he said the members had every reason to be encouraged by what they had accomplished, both in a general and local way. In regard to the financial principles, the party had prevented the destruction of the greenback as contemplated in the Resumption Act of 1875, and had accomplished the redemption of silver, both of which measures were victories for the people against the money power. There was a disposition now, in some of the bullionist papers, to renew the crusade against the greenback, and their efforts must be met with determined and aggressive action on the part of all anti-monopolists.

Other addresses of an outpoken and earnest character followed, and then the annual election of officers was held, resulting as follows:—
President, Philip Weaver; Vice President, Theo. T. Colburn; Secretary, F. H. Harris; Treasurer, J. N. Baldwin; Executive Committee, C. W. Powers, Jacob Meyer, Theo. Mortimer, George E. Day, Charles Murray, Chas. W. Kimball, George Ulrich and Alfred Hubbert.

It was unanimously resolved to change the name of the organization, making it simply the "Bloomfield National Club," and that a new roll of membership be made of those only who believed the "principles of the National Party" to be founded upon truth and justice, and absolutely necessary to the safety and prosperity of our country, and who would mutually pledge themselves upon honor to sustain and abide by the principles and rules adopted by the club.

The meeting then adjourned to meet on Wednesday evening next, in the second story front room of Mr. Carl's building.

A very welcome visit was made on Tuesday, but not sufficient to fill the citizens and replenish the wells that have become dry from the two months drought.

The Township Committee have improved Belleville avenue by putting on a top dressing of Pompton gravel.

Messrs. Pollock, Pollock & Co., the organ manufacturers, have leased the large building on Bloomfield avenue, known as the shoe factory. It will be used for building and storing organs for their organs, their buildings at Watkinson being insufficient for their increasing business.

There have been a number of removals from Bloomfield lately, by which our merchants have lost some good customers.

The Newark and Bloomfield Horse Car Company are paying the roadway between the two cities. BAKER & HUBBELL, our Bloomfield grocers, are constantly receiving new supplies, and sell as cheaply as any other grocers in the city.

BUNNELL & DEMAREST, watchmakers and jewelers, are constantly receiving new supplies, and sell as cheaply as any other watchmakers and jewelers in the city.

Rev. G. K. Morris, the Secretary, then read the annual report of the Alliance, showing that meetings have been held in Camden and Trenton under its auspices, that Alliance have been formed in Hamilton and Camden counties, that the Alliance in Ocean and Monmouth counties have been re-organized, and that Alliance are now organized in all counties except Cape May, Hudson and Passaic. Public sentiment is growing in favor of temperance. There is a better class of temperance lecturers and temperance books are finding their way to public libraries. It is also read extracts from reports of county alliances. The report from Somerset county spoke of the indictment and punishment of six liquor sellers at Camp Skillman, and the indictment of illegal sellers at Baritan. The Essex county report spoke of the organization of six or more township alliances in Newark churches. The Burlington county report said the outlook was brighter than a year ago, and that four township alliances had been organized. The Hudson county report stated that the number of licensed taverns in that county is decreasing, and that Chief Justice Bessey will not grant licenses except where it appears they are needed.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.

Rev. Dr. McKim, of Newark, said the most encouraging thing to him was the prevailing sentiment that it was right for the liquor men to do all they could in politics to promote their views, but that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright. He said that the moral and religious sentiment did not allow them to use any means but the most honest and upright.